STUDENT-PARENT TRANSFER AGREEMENT WAIVER

Fort Worth Independent School District

Policy Governing Participation in University Interscholastic League Sponsored Activities, Fort Worth Independent School District Activities, and Other Contests

The Board of Education of the Fort Worth Independent School District approved the following policy effective
 March 1, 1979:

(8.72) Rules Governing U.I.L. Events and Other Contests

All activities that are under the direction of the University Interscholastic League (U.I.L.) shall be strictly governed by the Constitution and Contest Rules as published by the U.I.L.

This policy covers literary and academic contests, music activities, and athletic contests. The Fort Worth Independent School District has local rules for athletics which are published in the Athletic Handbook. A complete listing of the U.I.L. activities is on the reverse side of this waiver.

The following has been developed in compliance with U.I.L. rules:

A student residing within the Fort Worth Independent School District, upon his/her enrollment in high school, must enroll in and attend the high school in the district in which he/she resides or Trimble Technical High School in order to be eligible for U.I.L. activities. (Resides means with parent or guardian as defined in Article VIII, Section 13, Constitution and Contest Rules, University Interscholastic League.) A student who transfers from one high school to another within the City of Fort Worth will be ineligible for a period of one year unless his/her parent or guardian moves into the school district to which the student has transferred.

I hereby certify that I, [Signature] (Parent/Guardian), and my child, [Signature] (Student), fully understand the policy governing participation in U.I.L. and other activities and contests in the Fort Worth Independent School District as indicated in the above policy.

I also understand that my child will be ineligible to participate in the contests and activities for a period of one year after the first day of enrollment in a school located in an attendance zone other than where we reside.

INFORMATION ABOUT SOCIAL SECURITY RECORDS

- Our records show the amount of earnings reported, not the amount of Social Security taxes which were paid.
- Wages were first covered under Social Security in 1937. Therefore, 1937 is the first year for which earnings may be shown on our records. Employers were required to report earnings semi-annually in 1937, and on a quarterly basis for the years from 1938 through 1977. Beginning with 1978, employers are required to report earnings annually.
- Our records do not show the exact dates of employment (month and day) because we don't need this information to figure Social Security benefits. Employers do not give us this information.
- Our records may not show earnings from last year because it takes some time to process earnings reports from employers.
- Each year, there is a maximum amount of earnings that are subject to Social Security taxes and are used to compute benefits. If a person earns more than this maximum amount, the earnings statement will usually show the maximum rather than the total earnings.

Years	Maximum Yearly Earnings Taxed for Social Security	Years	Maximum Yearly Earnings Taxed for Social Security

1984	$37,800	2003	$87,000*

- Beginning in 1951, self-employed persons could also receive Social Security credit for their work. The maximum amounts of self-employment earnings that are subject to Social Security taxes and are used to compute benefits are the same as those shown above.

☐ Please read the enclosed pamphlet(s) for more information.

* The maximum yearly earnings taxed for Hospital Insurance for 1991 is $125,000, 1992 - $130,000, 1993 - 135,000 and from 1994 to date there is no limit.

Re: Yokamon Hearn

Dear Ms. Terr:

This is in response to your open records request of January 12, 2005 to the Texas Health and Human Services Commission regarding state benefits received by Yokamon Hearn.

I have enclosed the only documents held by the Commission that are responsive to your request. According to our records, Mr. Hearn was active in our TANF database from September 1, 1996 until April 30, 1997. Mr. Hearn's resident address was [REDACTED]. Our records do not reflect that Mr. Hearn received any Medicaid benefits.

I regret it taking so long to get this information for you. Because of their age, most of the records you sought had been purged from our system, and only a limited amount of responsive information was retrievable.

If you have any questions regarding this correspondence, you may contact me at (512)/424-6910.

Sincerely,

DECLARATION OF DELVIN J. DILES

I, Delvin J. Diles, state that the following is true and correct to the best of my knowledge:

1. My name is Delvin J. Diles. I am serving a life sentence at the Telford Unit of TDCJ. I was convicted of capital murder for the death of Joseph Franklin Meziere. I give this affidavit freely and voluntarily to counsel for Yokamon L. Hearn. I have not received anything, nor have I been offered anything in exchange for this affidavit.
2. I met Yokamon Hearn in 1996 through a friend by the name of Paul Shaw. Back then, we knew Yokamon as "Yogi." Yogi didn't have many friends. He used to hang out with me, Dwight Burley, Paul Shaw, and a guy named Aaron Runnels.
3. I was big into rap when I met Yogi. Dwight, Paul, and I would get together all the time to rap. Yogi was there too, but he didn't have any input. He stayed in the background and never tried to rap. He never had anything to say when we asked him to rap.
4. Paul Shaw had an uncle who owned a golf course. Sometimes we would also go to the golf course to hit balls. Even though Yogi came along with us, he didn't hit the balls. He just hung out with us.
5. When we hung out together, we played a lot of video games. Yogi didn't join in. He didn't play videogames with us.
6. The night Mr. Meziere died, it was Dwight's idea to go jacking. Jacking meant to take someone's car. Before we got to the 7-Eleven, there was no plan to kill Mr. Meziere or anyone else. Once we were at the 7-Eleven, the fact that we didn't have masks to cover our faces came up. I said that we should kill Mr. Meziere and Yogi said he was cool with it. It was never Yogi's idea to kill the man.

Pursuant to 28 USC § 1746, I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

DECLARATION OF DWIGHT PAUL BURLEY

I, Dwight Paul Burley, state that the following is true and correct to the best of my knowledge:

1. My name is Dwight Paul Burley. I am incarcerated at the Luther Unit of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice in Navasota, Texas. I am serving a ten-year sentence for aggravated robbery of Joseph Meziere. I give this affidavit freely and voluntarily to counsel for Yokamon L. Hearn. I have not received anything, nor have I been offered anything in exchange for this affidavit.
2. When I met Yokamon in 1997^{2608B}, everyone called him "Yogi." I met Yogi through Delvin Diles. There was a group of us that hung out together. Delvin Diles, Paul Shaw, and Aaron Runnels, and me hung out together. At first, no one liked Yogi. He was like glue. Everyone gave him the cold shoulder, but he kept coming around. Yogi rolled with the flow. Yogi followed along with what the group decided.
3. Delvin, Paul, and I were into rapping. Yogi hung with us, but he couldn't rap. Yogi would sit there when he came to the studio with us. Even though Yogi couldn't rap, he would come to the studio because he wanted to be with us.
4. Yogi was kind of crazy. For example, when we went places with Yogi and there was a large group of people like at a football game, Yogi would stare down people. It didn't matter whether there were only five of us and twenty of them. We often had to tell Yogi to calm down because we all knew a fight could start and that we were outnumbered. Sometimes, we even had to take off running because we knew there were too many of them. The fact that we were outnumbered didn't seem to phase Yogi.
5. When Yogi hung out with us, he never had a job and he never had money. He said he went out to look for a job, but we didn't believe he was looking for a job. If we went to the movies or something like that, everyone had to pitch in because he had no money.
6. Yogi was a follower. He didn't have the skills to be a leader.

DECLARATION OF TERESA SHAVONN SHIRLEY

I, Teresa Shavonn Shirley, state that the following is true and correct to the best of my knowledge:

1. My name is Teresa Shavonn Shirley. I received a ten-year sentence for the armed robbery of Joseph Meziere. I am serving my time at the Gatesville Unit of TDCJ. I give this affidavit freely and voluntarily to counsel for Yokamon L. Hearn. I have not received anything, nor have I been offered anything in exchange for this affidavit.
2. I met Yokamon through my friend Dwight Burley. Dwight and Yogi were part of a group of guys that used to hang out together. Yokamon went by "Yogi" when I met him.
3. Yogi's actions were kind of wild when I met him. Yogi was an "impressionist." When I say that Yogi was an "impressionist," I mean that he did things to impress the guys in the group.
4. Yogi had poor hygiene. It looked like he did not bathe or groom himself regularly.
5. Dwight and the other guys he and Yogi used to hang out with were part of a rap group. Yogi, however, did not rap with them.
6. The night Mr. Meziere got shot, the plan was to go to North Dallas and "hit a lick." To "hit a lick" means to rob someone. I know that the plan was not to kill anyone because when we returned to Dwight's house after Mr. Meziere got shot, Dwight and Yogi got into a fight. Dwight was yelling at Yogi asking him why he shot the guy, why he did that.

Pursuant to 28 USC § 1746, I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 11-70031

RAMIRO RUBI IBARRA,

Petitioner-Appellant

v.

RICK THALER, DIRECTOR,
TEXAS DEPARTMENT OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE,
CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS DIVISION,

Respondent-Appellee

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas
USDC No. 6:02-cv-52

O R D E R:

Before JONES, Chief Judge, and HAYNES and GRAVES, Circuit Judges.

EDITH H. JONES, Chief Judge:

The Court has considered Ramiro Rubi Ibarra's motion to vacate the district court's judgment denying his petition for habeas corpus relief in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Martinez v. Ryan, 132 S. Ct. 1309 (2012). We DENY his motion.

Ibarra petitioned the district court for postconviction relief on 11 issues, which the district court denied, several of which as defaulted. Currently pending in this court is his application for a COA on three issues. Ibarra's current motion argues that Martinez invalidates the district court's conclusion that

No. 11-70031

Ibarra procedurally defaulted these COA issues: (1) an ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claim; (2) a claim of mental retardation under Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, 122 S. Ct. 2242 (2002); and (3) a claim that the prosecution violated his rights under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (“VCCR”). We may readily dismiss these latter two claims, as Martinez, by its terms, applies only to ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claims. Martinez, 132 S. Ct. at 1311-12. Martinez is also limited, again by its own express terms, to “initial-review collateral proceedings,” which it defines as “collateral proceedings which provide the first occasion to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” Id. at 1315. Other courts have rejected entreaties to expand Martinez, and we do the same. See, e.g., Arnold v. Dormire, 675 F.3d 1082 (8th Cir. Apr. 3, 2012) (declining to extend Martinez to claims of ineffective assistance in appeals from initial-review collateral proceedings); Hunton v. Sinclair, 2012 WL 1409608, at *1 (E.D. Wash. Apr. 23, 2012) (declining to extend Martinez to Brady claims); Sherman v. Baker, 2012 WL 993419, at *18 (D. Nev. Mar. 23, 2012) (declining to extend Martinez beyond ineffectiveness claims).

The district court concluded that Ibarra defaulted his ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claim by first presenting it in his fourth state petition for habeas relief. Ibarra now argues that his initial habeas counsel was also ineffective, thereby excusing his procedural default in presenting his underlying ineffective assistance claim. A short summary of the facts underpinning Ibarra’s allegedly deficient representation suffices. Ibarra claims his trial counsel “virtually abandoned their duty to prepare for sentencing,” focusing instead on an innocence defense. Ibarra argues that trial counsel’s failure to present more than two social history witnesses — Ibarra’s wife and one of his siblings — rendered his sentencing-phase assistance constitutionally deficient. Following conviction, Ibarra was then appointed new counsel for his first state habeas petition, who raised only a purported Lackey claim¹ predicated on pre-indictment delays. The state trial court denied relief, and the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals (“TCCA”) affirmed. Ex parte Ibarra, No. 48,832-01 (Tex. Crim. App. Apr. 4, 2001) (unpublished).

Until recently, this court’s precedent foreclosed Ibarra’s argument. See, e.g., Martinez v. Johnson, 255 F.3d 229, 239-40 (5th Cir. 2001). A habeas petitioner must demonstrate cause — objectively external to his defense — and prejudice to overcome a regularly applied state procedural default, which ordinarily bars federal habeas review of a defaulted issue. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 746-47, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2562-63 (1991).

But, as Ibarra notes, the Supreme Court recently recognized a “limited qualification to Coleman” in Martinez. Martinez, 132 S. Ct. at 1319. In Martinez, a defendant, represented by counsel, was convicted of sexual conduct with a minor based in part on expert testimony regarding child-abuse accusations and recantations. Id. at 1313. The state of Arizona appointed new counsel for the defendant’s direct appeal. Appellate counsel pursued myriad claims unsuccessfully, but Arizona law required defendants to bring ineffectiveness of counsel claims only in post-conviction proceedings rather than on direct appeal. Id. at 1314. Appellate counsel initiated such a proceeding under Arizona procedures, but elected not to pursue an ineffectiveness claim against trial counsel; she ultimately filed a statement with the court that she found no colorable issue appropriate for post-conviction relief. Id. Martinez attempted to petition for post-conviction relief a year and a half later in state court, claiming trial counsel ineffectiveness. Id. The state habeas court dismissed Martinez's petition under its rule refusing to consider claims in subsequent petitions that could have been raised in earlier ones. Id.

No. 11-70031

Martinez began anew in federal court, again raising his IAC claims. Id. Martinez acknowledged his procedural default, but sought to avoid the familiar bar to federal review by alleging his habeas counsel's ineffectiveness as cause for his default. Id. at 1314-15. While leaving open the constitutional question "whether a prisoner has a right to effective counsel in collateral proceedings" that provide "the first occasion" to raise a trial-counsel-ineffectiveness claim, the Supreme Court established a "narrow exception" to the Coleman rule that "an attorney's ignorance or inadvertence in a postconviction proceeding does not qualify as a cause to excuse a procedural default." Id. at 1315. The Court distinguished Arizona's procedures for ineffectiveness claims from other post-conviction proceedings by noting that Arizona ineffectiveness claims roughly equate to direct review of ineffectiveness claims. Id. at 1311-12. The Court specifically noted that Arizona habeas courts "look[] to the merits of" the ineffectiveness claim, that no other court prior to the collateral proceeding has addressed the claim, and that prisoners pursuing initial review pro se are especially disadvantaged due to the lack of counsel's briefs or a court's opinion addressing their claims. Id. at 1312. The Court justified this ineffectiveness-specific exception based on the importance of counsel to the adversarial criminal process. Id. (citing the right to effective counsel as "bedrock").

Martinez, by its own terms, therefore establishes a specific and narrow exception to the Coleman doctrine; it reiterates this not merely once, but again and again, as the Court repeatedly (and exclusively) refers to the scenario of a state in which collateral review is the first time a defendant may raise a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Thus, the phrase "initial-review collateral proceeding" is a specifically defined term referring to states like Arizona in which a defendant is prevented from raising counsel's ineffectiveness until he pursues collateral relief (normally bereft of a right to counsel). Martinez defines the legal issue that it addresses as follows: “[Coleman] left open, and the Court of Appeals in this case addressed, a question of constitutional law: whether a prisoner has a right to effective counsel in collateral proceedings which provide the first occasion to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial. These proceedings can be called, for purposes of this opinion, ‘initial-review collateral proceedings.’” Martinez, 132 S. Ct. at 1315 (emphasis added). Reinforcing this definition, the Court states: “The State of Arizona does not permit a convicted person alleging ineffective assistance of trial counsel to raise that claim on direct review. Instead, the prisoner must bring the claim in state collateral proceedings.” Martinez, 132 S. Ct. 1309, 1313 (2012). “Where, as here, the initial-review collateral proceeding is the first designated proceeding for a prisoner to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial, the collateral proceeding is in many ways the equivalent of a prisoner’s direct appeal as to the ineffective-assistance claim.” Id. at 1317. “From this it follows that, when a State requires a prisoner to raise an ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claim in a collateral proceeding, a prisoner may establish cause for a default of an ineffective-assistance claim in two circumstances. The first is where the state courts did not appoint counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding for a claim of ineffective assistance at trial. The second is where appointed counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding, where the claim should have been raised, was ineffective under the standards of Strickland v. Washington.” Id. at 1318 (emphasis added) (citation omitted). Finally, “The rule of Coleman governs in all but the limited circumstances recognized here It does not extend to attorney errors in any proceeding beyond the first occasion the State allows a prisoner to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial” Id. at 1320 (emphasis added).²

No. 11-70031

No. 11-70031

When a state diverts ineffectiveness claims to collateral proceedings that function as the prisoner’s first opportunity to assert those claims, a prisoner who can demonstrate that he was either unrepresented in that collateral proceeding or that his initial habeas counsel performed ineffectively thereby establishes “cause” for purposes of Coleman’s cause-and-prejudice framework to forgive a state procedural default. Martinez goes on to describe the parameters of a “prejudice” showing. The result of Martinez is to allow petitioners in these narrowly described cases to urge their claims of ineffective trial (and habeas) counsel in federal court.

No published opinion from this court has yet considered Martinez’s applicability to Texas cases. To ascertain Martinez’s applicability to Texas procedures, it is useful to describe Arizona’s habeas procedures more carefully. Arizona bars initial review of ineffectiveness claims outside of collateral proceedings. Arizona’s collateral-review proceedings — “Rule 32 proceedings” — have predominated Arizona ineffectiveness adjudication since at least 1989, when the Arizona Supreme Court recommended ineffectiveness claims be raised under Rule 32. State v. Valdez, 770 P.2d 313, 319 (Ariz. 1989). Yet Arizona practitioners continued to raise ineffectiveness claims on direct appeal. As Rule 32 motions could either follow direct appeals or proceed contemporaneously with direct appeals, these ineffectiveness proceedings were sometimes consolidated on direct appeal, only to be remanded to the trial court. State v. Spreitz, 39 P.3d 525, 526-27 (Ariz. 2002). In 2002, the Arizona Supreme ² Had the Court sought to craft a general exception to Coleman for claims of ineffective trial counsel, it would have said: “inadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner’s procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” Instead, the court said: “inadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review collateral proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner’s procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” Martinez, 132 S. Ct. at 1315.

No. 11-70031

Court “clarified]” this “murky” procedure by instructing appellate courts to disregard ineffectiveness claims on direct appeal, regardless of merit. Id. at 527. Arizona’s Rule 32 proceedings remained the exclusive venue for developing an ineffectiveness record; at least one Arizona appellate court has expressly disapproved using motions for a new trial to develop ineffectiveness claims in favor of the Rule 32 procedure. See State v. Williams, 819 P.2d 962, 964 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1991).

Contrast these procedures with Texas’s rules governing ineffectiveness claims. The TCCA made clear that a state habeas petition is the preferred vehicle for developing ineffectiveness claims. Robinson v. State, 16 S.W.3d 808, 809-10 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000). Yet Texas defendants may first raise ineffectiveness claims before the trial court following conviction via a motion for new trial, when practicable, and the trial court abuses its discretion by failing to hold a hearing on an ineffectiveness claim predicated on matters not determinable from the record. Holden v. State, 201 S.W.3d 761, 762-63 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003). A prisoner who develops such a record through a new trial motion can of course pursue the denial of an ineffectiveness claim through direct appeal, but the TCCA has indicated that a new trial motion is neither a sufficient nor necessary condition to secure review of an ineffectiveness claim on direct appeal. Indeed, an ineffectiveness claim may simply be raised on direct appeal without the benefit of a motion for new trial. Robinson, 16 S.W.3d at 813. As a result, both Texas intermediate courts and the TCCA sometimes reach the merits of ineffectiveness claims on direct appeal. Thompson v. State, 9 S.W.3d 808, 813-14 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999). Where they do not, Texas habeas procedures remain open to convicted defendants. Ex parte Nailor, 149 S.W.3d 125, 129, 131 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004). In short, Texas procedures do not mandate that ineffectiveness claims be heard in the first instance in habeas proceedings, and they do not by law deprive Texas defendants of counsel-and court-driven guidance in pursuing ineffectiveness claims.

No. 11-70031

Accordingly, Ibarra is not entitled to the benefit of Martinez for his ineffectiveness claims, as Texas procedures entitled him to review through counselled motions for new trial and direct appeal. We therefore DENY Ibarra's motion to vacate the district court's judgment. This disposition does not affect our consideration of the pending COA application.

MOTION DENIED.

GRAVES, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part:

I agree with the majority that Ramiro Rubi Ibarra's motion to vacate should be denied, as he presently has an application for a certificate of appealability (COA) pending before this Court. Further, as the Government asserts, the motion is an "improper procedural vehicle" for obtaining the relief he seeks because this relief is not available until a decision is made on the COA. However, the majority denies the motion to vacate based on its interpretation and application of Martinez v. Ryan, 132 S. Ct. 1309 (2012), and its finding that Martinez does not apply to Texas. Therefore, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

As the majority states, Martinez recognizes a limited exception to Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 746-47, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2562-63 (1991). Specifically, in Martinez, the Court said:

To protect prisoners with a potentially legitimate claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel, it is necessary to modify the unqualified statement in Coleman that an attorney's ignorance or inadvertence in a postconviction proceeding does not qualify as cause to excuse a procedural default. This opinion qualifies Coleman by recognizing a narrow exception: Inadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review collateral proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner's procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.

Id. at 1315. (Emphasis added).

To find that Ibarra could not be one of those prisoners with a potentially legitimate claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel that Martinez proposes to protect, one must read the above use of "initial-review collateral proceedings" to mean state-mandated initial-review collateral proceedings rather than rely on the literal definition of an "initial-review collateral proceeding."¹ Yet the

Court did not include “state-mandated” or any such phrase in pronouncing this exception. The Court also did not exclude the application of this equitable exception to prisoners like Ibarra, who raised IAC claims in a collateral proceeding as strongly suggested by the state. Yet the Court specifically excluded “attorney errors in other kinds of proceedings, including appeals from initial-review collateral proceedings, second or successive collateral proceedings, and petitions for discretionary review in a State’s appellate courts.” Martinez, 132 S.Ct. at 1320. While Martinez does repeatedly refer to the applicable Arizona requirement, it is an Arizona case, and, of course, the narrow exception set out above would apply to a state such as Arizona which requires that IAC claims are raised collaterally.

Moreover, as stated by the majority, the Supreme Court specifically noted that Arizona habeas courts look to the merits of the ineffectiveness claim, that no other court prior to the collateral proceeding has addressed the claim, and “defendants pursuing first-tier review . . . are generally ill equipped to represent themselves because they do not have a brief from counsel or an opinion of the court addressing their claim of error.” Id. at 1317.² (Internal marks omitted). That is exactly the situation with Ibarra. The Texas habeas court would have been the first court to look to the merits of his ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim. As to the third factor above, Ibarra and Martinez were both a prisoner has a right to effective counsel in collateral proceedings which provide the first occasion to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” Martinez, 132 S.Ct. at 1315. That “definition” does not include any language such as state-mandated. Further, that “definition” supports the proposition that Martinez applies to Ibarra as, based on the preference of the State of Texas, his first habeas proceeding would be one of the “collateral proceedings which provide the first occasion to raise a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.”

represented by counsel, but the Supreme Court extended the exception both to unrepresented and represented defendants. Martinez, 132 S.Ct. at 1318.

The Supreme Court unequivocally made an “equitable ruling” creating an exception to a default in instances with and without counsel. In an “equitable ruling,” there is no practical or legal way to distinguish between a prisoner asserting that his initial-review collateral proceeding counsel was ineffective for failing to assert an ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claim in a state that requires the claim to be raised collaterally and a state that strongly suggests that the claim should be raised collaterally. In both instances the claim would properly be raised collaterally. The only reasonable distinction between the two would be in the context of a constitutional ruling, which is not what the Supreme Court made. And, as the Supreme Court says, the purpose of the exception is to “protect prisoners with a potentially legitimate claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel.”

Texas, like Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and others, is not a state where you must raise IAC claims in collateral proceedings, although it is the preferred and encouraged method of raising IAC claims. Notwithstanding that Texas does not require IAC claims to be raised in a motion for new trial or on direct appeal but does require that they must be raised no later than the initial collateral proceeding, there clearly are instances where a collateral proceeding will be the “first occasion” to legitimately raise a claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel in Texas. That “first occasion” would necessarily be an “initial review.” Ibarra’s case appears to be one of those occasions.

Based on the interpretation of the application of Martinez, the majority is finding that Ibarra is not entitled to the benefit of Martinez because “Texas procedures entitled him to review through counselled motions for new trial and direct appeal.” The majority also states, “[f]ollowing conviction, Ibarra was then appointed new counsel for his state habeas petition, who raised only a purported Lackey claim. . . .” Based on the interpretation of the application of Martinez, the majority is finding that Ibarra has defaulted on any claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel that state habeas counsel failed to raise in his initial state habeas petition because Texas allowed said claimed ineffective trial counsel to raise his own ineffectiveness in a motion for new trial or on direct appeal. Overlooking the fact that failing to raise his own ineffectiveness could possibly be a basis for an IAC claim, it is not equitable to find that Ibarra has defaulted on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel because his claimed ineffective counsel did not prematurely raise said claim when clearly not practicable.

With regard to cited cases, the majority cites Arnold v. Dormire, 675 F.3d 1082 (8th Cir. Apr. 3, 2012), as a basis for not “expanding” Martinez. Arnold was an appeal from an initial-review collateral proceeding. This is not an appeal from an initial-review collateral proceeding. Hunton v. Sinclair, 2012 WL 1409608, at *1 (E.D. Wash. Apr. 23, 2012), was a Brady claim. This is an IAC claim. Also, Sherman v. Baker, 2012 WL 993419, at *18 (D. Nev. Mar. 23, 2012), actually said that to the “extent that Sherman claims ineffective assistance of post-conviction counsel prevented him from presenting any of his claims in compliance with Nevada’s procedural rules, the Court in Martinez made clear that post-conviction counsel’s ineffectiveness can serve as cause only with respect to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel at trial.” Id. That is exactly the situation here - Ibarra’s underlying claim is ineffective assistance of trial counsel, the merits of which would be decided pursuant to his application for a COA. Also, notably, it appears that Nevada, like Texas, allows ineffective assistance of counsel to be raised on direct appeal. McConnell v. State, 212 P.3d 307, 314 (Nev. 2009). See also Nev. Rev. Stat. 34.810.

Additionally, the Ninth Circuit in Leavitt v. Arave, 2012 WL 1995091 (9th Cir. June 1, 2012), found that Idaho's unique post-conviction procedure for capital defendants requiring that any claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel must be raised in a post-conviction action that is then litigated before the direct appeal was the "'initial-review collateral proceeding' as to those claims about which Martinez speaks." Id. at *8. The Ninth Circuit left open the question of whether Martinez would apply to non-capital matters.

Even more relevant is this Court's handling of Martinez in the unpublished opinion of Lindsey v. Cain, 2012 WL 1366040 (5th Cir. Apr. 19, 2012).³ In Lindsey, this Court granted a COA and remanded for further proceedings in light of Martinez, saying:

When a state, like Louisiana, requires that a prisoner raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim on collateral review, a prisoner can demonstrate cause for the default in two circumstances: (1) "where the state courts did not appoint counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding for a claim of ineffective assistance at trial" and (2) "where appointed counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding, where the claim should have been raised, was ineffective under the standards of Strickland [v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984)]." Id. at *8 (citation omitted). Further, the prisoner must also show that "the underlying ineffective-assistance-of-trial-counsel claim is a substantial one, which is to say that the prisoner must demonstrate that the claim has some merit.

Id. at *1.

³ This unpublished case and others are mentioned to demonstrate how this Court and others have applied Martinez.

Louisiana, like Texas, allows a prisoner to raise ineffective assistance of counsel on direct appeal “when the record contains sufficient evidence to decide the issue and the issue is properly raised by assignment of error on appeal.” State v. Brashears, 811 So.2d 985 (La. App. 5 Cir. 2002). See also State v. Williams, 738 So.2d 640, 651-652 (La. App. 5 Cir. 1999) (“Ineffective assistance of counsel claims are most appropriately addressed on application for post conviction relief, rather than on direct appeal, so as to afford the parties adequate opportunity to make a record for review. However, when an ineffective assistance claim is properly raised by assignment of error on direct appeal and the appellate record contains sufficient evidence to evaluate the claim, the reviewing court may address the ineffective assistance claim in the interest of judicial economy.”).

In Adams v. Thaler, --- F.3d ----, 2012 WL 1415094 (5th Cir. April 25, 2012), a case where the prisoner reasserted ineffective assistance of counsel in a successive habeas petition after the district court found that he had procedurally defaulted under Coleman, this Court said:

Although we need not, and do not, address the impact of Martinez on the Texas habeas landscape, we note that Texas does not require a defendant to raise an ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim only in state habeas proceedings, see Lopez v. Texas, 343 S.W.3d 137, 143 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011), and that ineffective assistance claims (particularly those, like Adams’s claim, involving trial counsel’s failure to object to jury instructions) are often brought on direct appeal, with mixed success.

Id. at *3, n.4.

In Cantu v. Thaler, --- F.3d ----, 2012 WL 1970364 (5th Cir. June 1, 2012), on remand from the Supreme Court, this Court remanded to the district court

“so that the district court may decide in the first instance the impact of Martinez v. Ryan on Cantu’s contention that he had cause for his procedural default.” *Id.*⁴

In analyzing the application of Martinez in Brown v. Thaler, --- F.3d ---, 2012 WL 2107238 (5th Cir. 2012), this Court said:

The Supreme Court’s recent decision in Martinez v. Ryan, does not assist Brown’s argument. In Martinez, the Court held that “[i]nadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review collateral proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner’s procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals did not find Brown’s ineffective assistance claim to be procedurally defaulted, but instead considered the claim on the merits.

Id. at *15, n. 4.

In Williams v. Alabama, 2012 WL 1339905 (N.D.Ala. April 12, 2012), the district court found that Williams demonstrated cause under Martinez to overcome procedural default of his ineffective assistance of counsel claim. The court ultimately denied the claim for ineffective assistance of counsel because Williams failed to demonstrate prejudice or that his claim had merit. The fact that the Alabama district court found Martinez applicable is significant because Alabama, like Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, does not require a claim for ineffective assistance of counsel to be raised collaterally. Specifically, the Alabama rule says:

Any claim that counsel was ineffective must be raised as soon as practicable, either at trial, on direct appeal, or in the first Rule 32 petition, whichever is applicable. In no event can relief be granted on a claim of ineffective assistance of trial or appellate counsel raised in a successive petition.

⁴ The Supreme Court also remanded Newbury v. Thaler, 132 S.Ct. 1793 (March 26, 2012), for consideration of Martinez. Further, this is not an exhaustive list of cases analyzing the application of Martinez.

Ala. R. Cr. P. 32.2(d).

Thus, various courts, including a panel of this Court, have decided the application of Martinez differently than the majority. To be clear, this has no bearing on whether Ibarra has a substantial claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel, as any review of the merits of his claims would be conducted pursuant to his application for a COA. I am not convinced that it is correct to foreclose the possible application of an “equitable ruling” to Texas prisoners with potentially legitimate claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. Therefore, I respectfully concur in part and dissent in part.

TEXAS CRIMINAL APPELLATE MANUAL 1996

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

1996

INTRODUCTION

1996 TEXAS CRIMINAL APPELLATE MANUAL

The first edition of this manual was published by the Criminal Justice Section in 1986, shortly before the Rules of Appellate Procedure went into effect, and the second edition was published in 1989, after many of the questions left open in the rules had been answered by the courts. Now, in 1996, this third edition is published in response to the many changes in appellate practice that have occurred over the past seven years.

One subject area in particular has changed a lot. In 1989, it was only necessary to include one section on post-conviction writs of habeas corpus under Art. 11.07 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure. Since then, that statute has been amended and a wholly new statute governing post-conviction writs in capital murder cases, art. 11.071, has been enacted. As a result, this edition contains five articles on writs, including capital writs, competency, and federal writs.

Some things have not changed, however. Most of the articles are co-authored by a prosecutor and a defense attorney, and most include forms or sample documents. As before, there is no article on certiorari practice in the United States Supreme Court and no copies of the various local rules enacted by some of the courts of appeals. Practitioners should contact those courts to see if any local rules might alter the information in this manual.

We hope this manual will be a helpful guide to the lawyers and judges practicing appellate law in the State of Texas, although it should always be used in conjunction with the applicable statutes and rules and most recent case law. We solicit your comments and suggestions.

I. INTRODUCTION.

Representing a death row inmate in state capital writ litigation is some of the most difficult legal work there is. The stakes are literally life or death. Many procedural pitfalls can derail a promising writ application. The hours are often long, the pay will often be disappointing, and attorneys representing people on death row will never win popularity contests. Writ practice is not for the faint of heart.

Nonetheless, there is no more important criminal defense work. The Great Writ of habeas corpus has long served as a bulwark of personal liberty in the United States and the State of Texas. The writ is constantly under attack by those who view it as an example of the rights of criminals being more important than the rights of victims. In fact, by energizing the writ to protect those persons now most in need of its help on death row, we maintain its vitality for all of us, should we ever need to rely on it. If you believe the writ to be worth the price it will exact to defend it and the people who need it, you should read on. If not, I suggest that you turn your attention to some other legal practice area.

There are some essential ideas to bear in mind as you consider the writ process from the applicant's perspective. They will be discussed again below, but I touch on them now for emphasis.

1. State habeas litigation is not the same as a direct appeal. Habeas litigation concentrates on developing and presenting facts outside the appellate record which, in conjunction with facts in the record, raise important constitutional claims. Habeas counsel must know the appellate record, but cannot be bound to it, or they will offer their clients nothing more than another attempt at a direct appeal.

2. Writ practice requires investigation. You can't learn about, develop, and present facts outside the record if you don't investigate the case. Investigation for a writ can be as intensive as investigation in preparation for trial. This must be so particularly where habeas counsel believes that trial counsel may have rendered ineffective assistance of counsel. It is impossible to accurately evaluate the effectiveness of counsel without knowing what the counsel in question knew or could have known.

3. You have to talk with your client. Your client is an indispensable source of information for your investigation. Visiting your client can also provide valuable insight into mental conditions or limitations that may have played an important role in the offense or the trial, but received little notice.

4. The applicant has the burden of proof. The State does not have to prove anything initially in writ litigation. This is the inmate's lawsuit and the inmate has the burden of going forward with evidence of significant constitutional violations that affected the trial or sentence.

5. Know the state habeas procedural rules cold. New legislation was passed last year which substantially changed capital writ procedure. Many of these changes were to the detriment of applicants, placing more obstacles that must be negotiated in the path to habeas relief. Lawyers can't avoid what they don't know about and there is a lot that is new to know about writ procedure now.

6. Understand the relationship between the state and federal habeas processes. What happens in state habeas can dramatically affect the ability of federal courts to apply the federal habeas corpus remedy to your client's case should the state writ application be unsuccessful. State capital writs must be litigated with an eye toward federal litigation that may become necessary later.

7. Be imaginative. Many of the important United States Supreme Court decisions upholding habeas corpus writ protection resulted from imaginative approaches by writ counsel. There is a new statute in Texas that offers much room for challenge and imagination. The law relevant to habeas litigation continues to develop in state and federal court; try to stay near the cutting edge.

8. Do not underestimate the opposition. Opposing counsel will almost always be a district attorney with significant experience with state habeas practice or with access to someone who has that experience. There is almost never any incentive to "deal" these cases. The fight will be very hard and you can expect the opposition to use every advantage state habeas procedure gives them.

9. Don't try to do this alone. You will likely be the only person appointed to represent your client in state capital writ proceedings, but it is impossible to know enough on your own to provide the most effective litigation strategy for your client. Many experienced criminal defense and habeas lawyers can offer invaluable advice on various issues of procedural and substantive law you will face. Seek them out and ask questions. Trying to be the Lone Ranger endangers your mental health and your client's life.

10. Your client will probably be executed. There is no nice way to put it. You can work hard and have good issues, but the system is not friendly to death row inmates. They know that and most are realistic about their chances, though they very much want to live. You have to be realistic too. If you cannot face the possibility of your client being executed, you should not be involved in this litigation. At the same time, remember that your client is a person, not the animal the local media so often like to portray. Deal with a person on death row as a person, with dignity, and many serious client communication problems can be avoided.

11. You are only human. You will make mistakes. There will be some things left undone that you regret. You may wonder at times why you ever got into this. All anyone can ask of you is that you engage all your abilities in the fight for your client's life. Active, dedicated advocacy is at the heart of the protection the Great Writ provides.

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF THE WRIT.

A. Nature of the Remedy

A writ of habeas corpus is a procedural vehicle which can be used by someone whose liberty is restrained, before or after conviction, to challenge the legality of his or her conviction and sentence. The writ is an order "issued by a court or judge of competent jurisdiction, directed to any one having a person in his custody, or under his restraint, commanding him to produce such person, at a time and place named in the writ, and show why he is held in custody or under restraint." TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 11.01.

Depending upon the type of error alleged, relief that could be granted through a writ could include release, with an order that the prisoner not be retried, retrial of both guilt/innocence and penalty phases of a trial, retrial of only the sentencing phase, or a new direct appeal.

B. Constitutional and Statutory Bases

The statutory provisions governing habeas corpus, found in Article 11 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, are based upon TEX. CONST. art. I, § 12, which says: "The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of right, and shall never be suspended. The Legislature shall enact laws to render the remedy speedy and effectual." (An informative history of the writ in Texas is found in James Harrington & Anne Burnham, Texas' New Habeas Corpus Procedure for Death Row Inmates: Kafkaesque -- and Probably Unconstitutional, 27 ST. MARY'S L. J. 69-102 (1995), attached as Appendix A.)

Before September 1, 1995, all state capital and non-capital writs were governed by TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 11.07. On that day a new capital writ procedure established in Article 11.071 of the code took effect. Prior to this change, the Court of Criminal Appeals had held that Article 11.07, § 2 was the exclusive vehicle for obtaining relief in a felony situation where the applicant was confined. Ex parte Alexander, 861 S.W.2d 921 (Tex. Crim. App. 1993). There is no reason to believe that the Court would rule differently regarding the application of Article 11.071 to capital writs now, unless it finds that the new procedure does not pass constitutional muster. Only the Court of Criminal Appeals has the authority to release persons from confinement as a result of a final felony conviction. Ex parte Hoang, 872 S.W.2d 694 (Tex. Crim. App. 1993).

C. Issues that can be Raised in State Writs

The Court of Criminal Appeals has written that state habeas should not be used to litigate matters which should have been raised on appeal. Ex parte Banks, 769 S.W.2d 539 (Tex. Crim. App. 1989). In Ex parte Bravo, 702 S.W.2d 189, 193 (Tex. Crim. App. 1982), the Court declared that it was "well established" that the habeas corpus process could be used "to review jurisdictional defects or denials of constitutional rights." Though the Court indicated in Ex parte Dutchover, 779 S.W.2d 76 (Tex. Crim. App. 1989), that claims based on the Texas Constitution are not cognizable on habeas, a later habeas decision concerning a capital case, determined that state constitutional errors so "exceptional or fundamental that they are not susceptible to a harm analysis," or that "so fatally infected" the trial procedure that due process was denied or a resulting sentence was rendered invalid and the judgment void, are cognizable in state post-conviction proceedings. Ex parte McKay, 819, S.W.2d 478, 481 (Tex. Crim. App. 1990).

The Court has also recently held that the state habeas remedy is available to death row inmates who can produce newly discovered evidence to prove innocence, asserting that the execution of an innocent person would violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Texas ex rel. Holmes v. Court of Appeals for Third Dist., 885 S.W.2d 389 (Tex. Crim. App. 1994).

Though the Court has suggested cognizability limitations in some of its decisions, the conventional wisdom among many writ counsel has been to include all constitutional claims they can identify and believe to be meritorious. This includes all claims that may have been raised on direct appeal, but did not utilize all the available state and federal provisions that they could have been based upon. Habeas counsel should make sure that all federal constitutional claims that are arguably meritorious be included so that they are preserved for federal habeas proceedings.

III. THE NEW STATE HABEAS PROCEDURE.

As has been previously noted, a new state habeas procedure for capital writs went into effect on September 1, 1995. Counsel filing capital writs must study and know well TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 11.071, which sets out the process. It provides resources which can aid the development and presentation of issues in state habeas applications, but includes significant time limitations and is unforgiving of incomplete initial applications. The process is much different and more detailed than its predecessor; the previous experience of judges, attorneys, and court personnel with habeas procedure will not be a reliable guide upon which to rely. For this reason, this chapter will discuss the new statute in detail. The discussion will begin by highlighting some of the most important differences between the new procedure in 11.071 and the old process in the former 11.07. A detailed discussion of the process established by the new provisions will follow.

A. Overview of Differences Between Old and New State Habeas Procedures.

The major changes occur in the following areas (page numbers for this article's detailed discussion of the new statute's provisions in each of these areas follow the brief descriptions):

Timing of State Habeas. Under the former 11.07, the state post-conviction process started after the direct appeal was concluded. 11.071 requires the state habeas remedy and direct appeal to be pursued simultaneously. See pp 16-17.

Provision of Counsel. Counsel was neither required nor routinely provided in many counties under the former 11.07. The new statute provides, through appointment by the Court of Criminal Appeals, counsel for death row inmates for the state habeas process. See pp. 8-15.

Provision of Investigative and Expert Assistance. Such assistance was rarely, if ever, provided under the former procedure and the necessity for investigation was often challenged by writ opponents. Article 11.071 recognizes the necessity of reasonable investigation and provides funds for it, upon a sufficient, ex parte showing of need to the Court of Criminal Appeals by the applicant. See pp. 14-16.

Time Limitations. There were few time limits in the former 11.07. Those that existed did not apply to applicants and were routinely ignored. There were no deadlines for the filing of state habeas applications and no requirement that counsel move a case to federal court at the conclusion of the state post-conviction process, within any specified period of time. The new statute includes time limits for almost every step of the process, including the filing of the writ application, with

A particularly interesting problem may be presented by the courts which are continuing to appoint writ counsel, even after the effective date of 11.071. If the resources, in terms of compensation or funds for experts, investigators, etc. vary significantly between the Court of Criminal Appeals' appointment system and the systems of appointing convicting courts, there may be grounds for Texas equal rights and federal equal protection constitutional challenges to the statute.

Practice Note. Habeas counsel may want to challenge the constitutionality of the process when coming up against the limitations on fees and resources that the statute imposes, or when its time limits are operating to prevent counsel from developing information vital to a full and fair presentation of an inmate's constitutional claims. Remember that it is critical to make a record for federal court review if the inmate loses in state habeas, of all unfair, unconstitutional aspects of the state habeas system.

IV. WHAT ISSUES ARE YOU LOOKING FOR?

Counsel deciding what issues to raise in a state writ application must be guided by three principles:

- (1) Issues must be based upon serious state and federal constitutional error.
- (2) The writ process is not direct appeal. The trial record is a springboard for, not the boundary of, the search for issues that can and should be raised.
- (3) Any issue not raised on federal constitutional grounds on direct appeal or in state habeas proceedings is lost to the inmate and cannot be raised in federal court. As long as an issue can be supported by the record and/or factual investigation, it should be raised if it has not been raised on direct appeal.

Courts have formulated various tests for serious constitutional error. For purposes of preparing a writ application, habeas counsel should assume it to be error that could reasonably have affected that outcome of either phase of a capital trial. If you have doubts about the seriousness of an error, include it in the writ; later research or factual development may show it to be more serious than it initially appeared. If you don't include it in the initial writ application and it was not raised on direct appeal, the issue is almost certainly lost to the inmate forever.

If you identify a constitutional error that direct appeal counsel should have raised, but did not, raise it in the writ application. Though habeas corpus proceedings focus on issues developed largely through extra-record investigation, constitutional errors that could have been raised on direct appeal, but were not should be raised in the writ application to give state courts and chance to correct them and to preserve the errors for later federal review if necessary.

If direct appeal counsel fails to raise an error based solely on the violation of a state statute that would result in automatic reversal of a conviction or sentence, habeas counsel should raise that error as in ineffective assistance of counsel on direct appeal claim.

Issue-spotting resources. It is beyond the scope of this article to identify and discuss all the possible errors that would be appropriate in a state habeas application. An extensive listing and brief discussion of possible issues that can be raised is found in a manual published by the American Bar Association for attorneys who are litigating death penalty cases in post-conviction proceedings: MANUAL FOR ATTORNEYS REPRESENTING DEATH SENTENCED PRISONERS IN POSTCONVICTIN PROCEEDINGS. Writ counsel should get this manual immediately after being appointed. It is available free of charge to attorneys representing a person on death row by contacting:

The second edition of this two-volume treatise would can be a valuable resource for state habeas counsel.

Some discussion of the issues the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has confronted in writ applications is found in [the Teague book - give reference]

Examples of issues that could be raised. If counsel reviews the above sources, it will be evident that there is a wide variety of issues that can legitimately be raised in state habeas writs applications. Examples of issues that appear in cases that counsel should watch for are:

- (a) Issues arising from state misconduct, such as failure to reveal exculpatory information, including information that could have been used to cross-examine vital state's witnesses, or that the state knowingly used perjured testimony or failed to correct perjured testimony by a prosecution witness (most frequently snitch witnesses);
- (b) Claims revolving around the applicant's mental health at the time of the offense and the time of the trial. These may include claims of incompetency to stand trial, lack of specific intent for the capital murder, or claims of ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to develop and present mitigating evidence of mental defects or diseases during the punishment phase of the trial.
- (c) Claims arising from the denial of or failure to use expert assistance that would have provided critical evidence in support of the applicant at trial.
- (d) Claims arising from racial discrimination in the composition and selection of the petit or grand jury, or from discriminatory actions or comments toward the defendant at trial by the court, prosecutors, or court personnel;
- (e) Claims arising out of jury misconduct, such as visiting the scene of the crime against court instructions, conducting experiments with the evidence or at the scene, or using a Bible or other resources not supplied by the court to guide jury deliberations;

- (f) Claims of ineffective assistance of trial or appellate counsel, based on unreasonable, prejudicial actions or omissions. In cases where important issues have been not been preserved at trial due to failure to object or through other procedural default, this may be the only way to draw the court's attention to them.

Counsel must know the law. It is obvious, but bears saying that counsel must know state criminal law and state and federal constitutional law, or know where to readily find it, to identify the existence of claims and what will be required to prove them. Continuing Legal Education seminars and publications concerning criminal law issues are excellent sources of information on the law. As long as it exists, the Texas Resource Center can also be a good source of information on current legal developments and sample issues. That organization can be contacted through Eden Harrington in Austin at (512) 320-8300 or Lynn Lamberty in Houston at (713) 222-7788.

Don't be afraid to be imaginative. There is no formula for the statement of a meritorious issue or the law supporting one. Some of the best state writ work done is by lawyers who are willing to put forward issues that have not been previously considered by the courts or in a way that has not been foreclosed by them. This is not to say that lawyers should make up claims; the legal foundation for any issue presented to Texas courts must be sound. It never hurts and may help to catch the courts' attention to be interesting and creative in claim statement and formulation.

Facts win cases. In limited instances, straight legal claims in a writ application may be successful. If a good job has been done on direct appeal, however, the errors of law based on the record will have been raised there. Claims in state habeas most often must be based on extensive and careful factual development and presentation to be successful. As is clear from the earlier discussion of the new statute, it is critical that the initial application state facts, as well as law, upon which relief can be granted. There is little opportunity to amend and virtually no meaningful opportunity to raise issues that have been missed, in a later application. The state writ process will likely move relatively quickly once it starts. Habeas counsel needs to find out what facts are necessary early so that efforts can be made to fight for the opportunity to develop and present those facts to the courts.

A word about innocence... Experienced criminal and state habeas lawyers know that the majority of capital murder defendants they have represented have said at one time or another that they were innocent. The frequency of that claim, often in the face of what appears to be powerful contradictory evidence, causes many lawyers to become so skeptical about claims of innocence that they are reluctant to pursue them, particularly in the context of state habeas proceedings. Nonetheless, every year stories surface in Texas and across the country of innocent defendants who have been wrongfully convicted and have spent significant time in prison. Innocent people can be convicted of capital murder. Habeas counsel owe it to their clients to hear out their innocence claims and to check them out to the extent necessary to determine whether there is any reasonable chance that they could be true. Proving innocence is a terribly difficult thing, but the new statute allows such a claim to be raised, even in a subsequent application. Doing what you can to ensure that a horrible mistake is not made is worth the effort.

V. INVESTIGATION

A. The Need for Investigation.

Facts outside the record are critical to a successful writ application. Those facts must be sought out through investigation. The investigation required of habeas counsel is more extensive than that required of trial counsel. Because of the nature of habeas claims, habeas counsel must investigate not only the client's background and the facts that gave rise to the offense, but also the investigation by police and defense counsel and the actions of the jury. There is no quick and easy way to do this and counsel will almost certainly need the help of a trained investigator to do an efficient and complete job, particularly in view of the time limits on filing and amending or supplementing an application in the new statute.

Courts should expect you to energetically investigate habeas claims because habeas counsel has the legal duty to do so after being appointed. Article 11.071 § 3 requires counsel to "investigate expeditiously, before and after the appellate record is filed in the Court of Criminal Appeals, the factual and legal grounds for the filing of an application for a writ of habeas corpus." There are many sources of information potentially available to you. A partial listing of those sources appears in Appendix I. Some more specific suggestions about how to approach investigation follow.

B. Starting Points

1. Read the Record.

You have to know what happened at trial to have any idea of what habeas issues might be available. Remember that you are looking not only for error on the record, but also indications of things going on outside the record that should be investigated. Two examples will help to make the point.

If you see a letter in the record indicating that your client was examined to determine competency to stand trial, you will want to know why and how that occurred. You will also want to watch the record for any other indications that the client was having difficulty understanding the proceedings or assisting trial counsel with the defense.

If you see testimony from a jailhouse informant, you should immediately determine to investigate that person's background, the charges pending against him or her before, at the time of, and after the trial, and all circumstances leading to the informant testifying at trial. Informants are frequently relied upon at trial to give evidence of damaging admissions allegedly made by defendants and it is not uncommon for juries and defense counsel to be unaware of important information regarding the scope of the deals they received for their testimony.

Capital records are voluminous and habeas counsel must review the entire record, including voir dire. Often suppression hearings are conducted during the weeks that jury selection is progressing, and those hearings are often reported in the voir dire volumes. As mentioned earlier, counsel will also want to be looking for possible constitutional error in jury selection, or hints of things that went unreported in the record, but were affecting the ability of the defendant to receive a fair trial. Some suggestions about record review are included in Appendix J.

2. Talk to your client.

There is no one who knows the facts of your client's involvement in the offense or the trial better than your client. Your first meeting with him or her should take place shortly after you are appointed.

Visiting arrangements. Male death row inmates are housed at the Ellis Unit near Huntsville, and female inmates at the Mountainview Unit near Gatesville. Both institutions now require you to make arrangements for legal visits by noon of the day before you plan to visit. The Ellis unit will not allow an investigator or paralegal to visit an inmate or accompany an attorney, unless that person has written authorization from the lawyer to visit the client and has been cleared by the prison. The clearance is a one-time process for anyone that the prison is not familiar with, and will take about a week for the prison to process.

You make arrangements for a prison visit by calling the Ellis Unit at (409) 295-5756 or the Mountainview Unit at (817) 865-7226 and telling the person who answers that you want to set up an attorney visit with a death row inmate. That person will forward you to the appropriate department, where someone will take your name, the inmate's name and identification number, and the day you wish to visit.

Contact visits are not allowed except under highly unusual circumstances. You will need permission from the warden to take a tape recorder in with you. Expect that any briefcases or containers you take with you will be searched. No food or beverages can be taken into the prison, but vending machine fare is available in the visiting room. When you arrive at the prison, you must check in with the guard tower in front of the front gate. At that time you will be asked for photo identification, your Texas or other state bar card, and the names and numbers of the inmates you are there to visit. The guard will call inside to verify your visit. Once inside, you will be asked to sign a special TDC form that requires your name, address, and the client's name.

Don't expect that you will be allowed visitation in a separate room; attorneys and all other visitors are together in a large U-shaped visiting room with the inmates seated behind plexiglass and steel mesh walls on the inside of the U. Having private conversations can be difficult, depending on how close the prison places others to you.

While it may be necessary in some emergency situations to try to contact your client by telephone, do not substitute this for personal contact. It can take hours or even days for the prison to arrange for an inmate to return a phone call. You will virtually never be able to wait on the line and have the prison bring the inmate to the phone to speak with you, unless that person's execution is imminent. Phone calls to the Ellis Unit are always monitored by prison personnel. It is not clear whether this happens at Mountainview, but you should assume that it does, for the protection of your client.

Topics to cover. (1) Your client's version of the facts of the offense; (2) his or her relationship with the trial and direct appeal lawyers; (3) anything the client found strange, unusual or objectionable about the trial or direct appeal; (4) your client's social history, including his or her background, education, family history, medical history, drug abuse history, etc. You should strive to know more about your client and his or her history than any other lawyer has known, and perhaps more than his own family has known, to ensure that you are aware of and can use all beneficial information that might come from that knowledge.

Why do you want to know anything about your client's social history? Of course, an obvious reason is to identify possible mitigating evidence that could have been, but was not, presented at trial. Knowing your client's history also gives you perspective on mental limitations or disorders that may have contributed to the offense, to a confession, or to the client's inability to understand what was happening at the trial. Just sitting and talking with your client in a general way will allow you to observe how he or she responds to questions and may indicate to you the presence of mental problems that the record might not have suggested.

There has been considerable litigation in recent years in Texas surrounding "double-edged" mitigating evidence, that is, evidence that could paint the defendant in a bad light, making the defendant appear dangerous, while at the same time reducing his or her moral culpability or blameworthiness for the offense. If you are considering raising an issue that deals with such evidence, it is important to remember that courts now seem to require that there be a nexus between such evidence and the commission of the offense. The evidence at issue must have some causal link to the offense. Expert assistance will be needed to supply this link.

As is the case with a review of the trial record, what your client tells you must serve as the beginning, not the end, of your investigation. Death row inmates are almost always considered incredible by courts unless their accounts are well supported with other evidence. If you can't find other support for what your client says and you have had adequate resources to do so, you should think carefully before including a claim based solely on your client's account in a habeas application.

As you have probably concluded from the comments in this section, the information you need from your client cannot be obtained in just one interview. Obviously there are limits to how many times you can travel to the prison to see the inmate, but the more conversations you have, the more likely it is that you will win the inmate's trust and uncover additional helpful and highly relevant information.

Make sure that your client signs many general releases of information for your use in the investigation. Notary service is often available free of charge at the prisons, but you must make the front desk aware of the need for a notary when you arrive, so that appropriate arrangements can be made.

3. Interview your client's family members.

They may shed light on mitigating evidence that was not presented at trial, or guilt/innocence phase evidence that was suggested to trial counsel, but not presented. They will certainly have things to tell you about your client's background that you can get nowhere else that could contribute substantially to the development of claims concerning mental disorders, mental limitations, or drug abuse. You will also want to ask them about their contacts with trial counsel, as part of your investigation into trial counsel's investigation.

4. Interview the trial lawyers.

Some experienced habeas litigators might disagree with interviewing trial counsel before one has a clear idea of what the claims will be. I think it can be very beneficial to do so, however, to get their files, their impressions of the trial, of the client, and any extra-record matters that should be investigated, before things may become adversarial.

Trial counsel are keenly aware that ineffective assistance of counsel is almost always considered and is often raised in state habeas proceedings. Many trial lawyers seem to believe that every lawyer preparing a capital writ who approaches them has a hidden agenda and is trying to wring damaging admissions from them. I think is often very wise to approach trial counsel when you have no preconceived notions of the issues and can simply sit and talk about the case in a non-threatening manner. You might find eventually that any ineffective assistance claim you could make would be far less powerful than another claim the trial lawyers will help you on, if you are not attacking them. They are more likely to trust you and your promises of no ineffective assistance claim if they have had a previous, positive meeting with you.

Of course, before you decide not to file an ineffective assistance claim, you must investigate it as fully as possible. If you think that such a claim should be raised, interview the lawyers again, this time with the idea of getting answers to specific questions that are troubling you about the representation. If you are asked whether an ineffective assistance claim will be filed, you should be honest about your thoughts in that regard and assure the lawyers that the filing of such a claim is not a personal vendetta against them, but is a necessary part of your job as habeas counsel. Angry trial lawyers will often submit affidavits to courts opposing ineffective assistance claims. Much of that anger can be subdued or prevented by being up front with them about the likelihood of an ineffectiveness claim.

One final note concerning trial lawyers is that you should always, at the first meeting with them, request their files. The files and all the notes in them belong to the client, not the lawyer, and you should insist on them being turned over to you. It is not unreasonable for a trial lawyer to ask for a copy of the file, or to ask that the original be returned when the client's case is finished, but having access to the file is vital, for it will tell you a lot about what information the lawyers had and what they were doing before, during and after the trial. Be sure that the file you receive includes all notes of the lawyers as well, for those notes are also the property of the client. If you can, it is good idea to have someone sequentially number each page in the lawyer's trial files in the order that they appeared when you received them. This aids in proof later of what documents were in the file and the order they were in.

C. Expanding the Investigation.

Your record review, and interviews of your client, his or her family, and trial counsel will give you a pretty good idea of what some of the important issues may be in the case. That will allow you to focus your energy on developing information relevant to those issues. You can develop information through use of the following resources:

1. Obtaining records

A wide variety of records can be valuable to you in proving claims. Appendix I contains a partial listing of some of these records. The records you will want to pursue will vary according to the claims you are attempting to develop.

It is vital to start gathering records as early in your writ preparation process as possible. Records collection is time consuming and is sometimes contested by agencies who are the custodians of records. When a dispute develops, expect considerable wrangling before you are successful, and there will be times when you are not successful. It is preferable to deal with these disputes early in the investigation rather than in the last weeks or days before the writ application is due.

Many records can be obtained through use of general release forms signed by your client. Examples appear in Appendix K. Some records custodians, such as the military, require special releases of their own design to be completed. Generally, those custodians can readily supply you with the necessary documentation for your client to complete.

Be sure to request all prison records from every previous incarceration of your client in any institution, as well as his or her time on death row. The general release form in Appendix K should be sufficient to allow you to gain access to those records. Those records may contain very important information concerning your client's mental and medical condition. These should be requested directly through the prison in which the inmate is housed. Medical records are kept separately from the other institutional records regarding each individual and you will have to write two separate checks, one for the medical records and one for the rest of them. Get as many of the prison records as you can. You can get access to almost everything, if you are reasonable and persistent.

School records are another valuable source of information. Through them you can find out about learning and mental difficulties your client was having throughout school that your client may be too embarrassed to tell you about or does not think are important. The records may include I.Q. tests or other testing that is quite helpful in learning how your client was able to function as he or she developed. When obtaining school records, you will need the names of all schools your client attended. Sometimes records in a school system will be stored in more than one place. Again, be persistent, and keep trying if you are met with an initial statement that no records exist.

Medical and mental health records should be sought from any care provider who treated your client. When getting these records, particularly from mental health professionals, make sure you specifically request all the records the care provider has, including handwritten or dictated notes made at or shortly after interviews or times of testing.

Criminal records of all important witnesses at the trial should be checked in the county of conviction and any counties where they have spent substantial time. You may find that some non-law enforcement witnesses had good reason to cooperate with the state at the trial, due to pending charges against them. You may also find that some witnesses had prior convictions that could have been used to impeach their testimony at trial.

Criminal and civil records concerning all members of the jury should be checked, to identify anything that would disqualify them from jury service, conflicts for any of the attorneys who may have previously dealt with a juror in some capacity, or any dishonest voir dire answers.

While you are checking criminal records, it is always a good idea to check on records concerning your client. Some inmates are poor historians and you need to know all that you can about your client's history with law enforcement before the capital offense.

Generally, when attempting to obtain any records, it is best to have someone go personally to the records custodian to make the request and follow up on it. It is much easier and quicker to resolve misunderstandings or to explain the nature of the need for the records in person rather than by letter or telephone. Of course, with out of state records, this may not always be possible, but the personal touch is often the most effective.

If some records custodians refuse to provide copies of records to you without a court order, seek one. If you have already filed your writ application, you may be able to subpoena the documents you need. Another approach is to file a motion for discovery with the court. See the discussion of discovery motions infra at p.38.

2. Information in the files of the prosecution, law enforcement agencies and other government agencies.

Always seek access to the district attorney's files and law enforcement agency files regarding the capital offense and any other offenses that you believe will be relevant to any of your claims, including offenses committed by key state's witnesses, such as jailhouse informants. You should not assume that prosecutors files contain copies of every document generated by law enforcement regarding your client or whoever you are attempting to investigate. Thus, it important to energetically seek access the files of every law enforcement agency that may have generated information regarding your client. Sometimes prosecutors and other agencies will let you see and copy things from them upon request. If not, there are two ways to try to get access.

a. The Open Records Act.

Though recent legislation has changed the terminology from "open records" to "public information," TEX. GOV'T CODE § 552.001 et. seq. continues to provide a valuable tool to lawyers seeking to investigate state habeas issues. It is not within the scope of this article to describe in detail the workings of the act, but counsel should review Appendix L, which contains a recent article written about the Act as it can be applied to habeas proceedings (minus the attachments that accompanied the original article, except for a sample Open Records Act request). Though the article was keyed to practice in Harris County, most of the information in it is applicable to the Act as a whole. (As long as it exists, the Texas Resource Center can also provide helpful information concerning the Act and how to proceed under it. The Resource Center may be contacted through Eden Harrington at (512) 320-8300 or Lynn B. Lamberty at (713) 222-7788)).

Since the time that the article in Appendix L was prepared, the Legislature has amended the statute. The text of those amendments follows the article in the appendix. The most important issue presented by the changes is whether the new 552.027(a), which exempts agencies from responding to ORA requests from people who are incarcerated, effectively ends the usefulness of the ORA to habeas counsel.

It should not do so, given the text of another new provision, 552.023, which gives a person and a person's authorized representative "a special right of access, beyond the right of the general public, to information held by a governmental body that relates to the person and that is protected from public disclosure by laws intended to protect that person's privacy interests." More simply put, people should be able to get information concerning them that is held by governmental agencies or subdivisions, themselves, or through their lawyers. The vesting of this right in part in the representatives of individuals may provide the antidote to the poison pill of 522.027(a). No doubt, this will be hotly litigated and habeas counsel should not shrink from the battle to protect this important avenue of investigation.

b. Motions for discovery.

Though the new habeas statute does not talk about discovery motions, it imposes a heavy burden on habeas counsel to investigate possible claims in a timely matter and it authorizes the convicting court to use a wide variety of tools to resolve factual disputes. Also, Tex. Gov't Code § 21.001(a) grants a district court "all powers necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction ... including the authority to issue the writs and orders necessary or in proper aid of its jurisdiction."

From this, it should follow that a habeas applicant is arguably entitled to discovery in state court. Texas courts have not, to this author's knowledge, ever comprehensively addressed the right to, or scope of, discovery for the applicant in the state habeas process. The right to get discovery through the courts is worth litigating if it is the only way you have to get information vital to your case.

Counsel should seek discovery as early as possible in the process, but should not simply make blanket requests for discovery that courts will almost certainly deny. Once counsel has identified the likely claims and has tried to develop information about them, discovery should be used in those situations where nothing short of a court order will cause someone or some agency or institution to provide the information you seek.

3. Talk with witnesses.

As you begin to focus on the claims you want to pursue, you will identify people who have important information about those claims. Some may have testified at trial. Others may never have been called or perhaps were even unknown at the time of trial. You or your investigator need to interview these people in person, if at all possible. If someone does have information that is helpful to you in proving a claim in the writ application, get an affidavit from that person immediately, if possible. This preserves the information in case something happens to the witness and helps to tie the witness down to the account they have told you. It is not uncommon to receive information orally from a witness that is helpful, only to find that at a later time when you want to reduce it to writing, the witness has had second thoughts about vital parts of the information or about being helpful at all.

Don't be hesitant to talk with witnesses who testified for the state. They may refuse to talk with you, but often they are happy to tell you what they remember, so long as you are cordial to them. It is always best to review a witness' testimony at trial before an interview, so that you can ask about any differences between the trial account and the present one, or can follow up on things that were unclear or not covered in the testimony. Of course, habeas counsel should always be sure that witnesses understand who counsel is working for and why they are being interviewed. It is a good idea to have people you or your investigator interview sign a form in which they say they understand who you are working for and have agreed to talk with you.

After an interview the person who conducted it should write a quick memo about it for the file. This will not only help compensate for memory lapses later, but provides some protection from any claims that may be made later of misconduct by writ counsel.

4. Seek expert assistance.

From what has been said thus far about investigation, it should be clear that the services of an experienced criminal or habeas investigator are invaluable in efficiently and comprehensively gathering the information necessary for a writ application. Consult with other experienced writ counsel if you are uncertain about who to hire. Because of the limited period of time in which you have to prepare a writ application, you have to give considerable guidance to an investigator working with you. Habeas investigation cannot be a matter of giving someone a file and telling them to see what they can find and report back. The investigation must be guided by what you identify as the likely issues, and remain sufficiently flexible to respond to unexpected information that could dramatically change the focus of one or many issues you intend to raise.

Other experts will likely be needed, too. It seems that mental health and medical experts are the focus of many writ counsel, as battles are fought over the mental condition of the applicant at the time of the crime and at trial. You should not lose sight, however, of the benefit that you can gain from other experts. If, for example, issues arise about some physical items of the guilt phase evidence, you may wish to employ experts to evaluate that evidence again, if it is still available. Crime scene reconstruction experts can help determine whether the offense could have occurred in the way the state's witnesses described. Any expert that you might consider using at trial to fight the state's case can be valuable in habeas proceedings to challenge the conviction.

This is not to say that habeas litigation is about sufficiency of the evidence, though it may at times feel like one has to prove a client innocent to attract the attention of some courts. The issues must still center around significant constitutional violations. Expert testimony can be critical in persuading a court that the facts the jury heard were unreliable, which is a substantial contribution to most claims of constitutional violations.

One should take care in choosing experts. Just as there are experts in various fields who predictably testify for the state, there are others who very regularly do so for the defense. Regular defense experts in habeas cases bring the advantage of knowing what burden of proof the lawyers have to meet and structuring their reports and examinations in ways that are responsive to that. The disadvantage of such experts is that courts probably know them as "defense" experts and accordingly assign them significantly reduced credibility. Finding experts who are sufficiently independent to be credible, and yet understand what is relevant in a habeas context, is difficult, but worth the effort. If you can't find someone who fits the latter description, use one of the more familiar defense faces anyway if expert testimony is critical; developing the facts is what this process must be about. Matters of credibility arising from the frequency with which someone testifies for one side or another can be dealt with later when arguing over the facts.

Experts are expensive. If you use one or more than one, you will likely easily outstrip the limited funding the Court of Criminal Appeals appears to be willing to provide. It is critical, therefore, that you assert your need for expert assistance as soon as you can identify specifically enough to be able to explain in detail why the expert would assist in the development of facts for a claim or particular class of claim for your case. You have to convince the Court that there is some reason to believe such claims may reasonably be made, if the facts can be developed. Your requests therefore, must be detailed and structured to what the actual costs will be as given to you by the expert. Don't underestimate what this assistance will cost for the Court. That is a recipe for disaster when the expert's bill comes due and the Court refuses to pay it, leaving you holding the bag. If expert assistance is denied, make a record of it for federal court review later and present the claim the best way you can with whatever assistance you are allowed, making the point regularly that you are not able to fully present the issue because of a denial of resources.

You can give information to experts to assist them. Their activities and product can be far more relevant to your needs or questions if they understand the context in which their findings may be used. They may require certain preliminary information to meaningfully conduct their examinations or arrive at their opinions. Just remember that anything you give to an expert may well be discoverable at a hearing if it serves as the basis for his or her opinion.

Finally, there is a difference of opinion among some habeas counsel about the desirability of having experts write reports about their activities and findings. The worry is that unhelpful or harmful reports could become the target of discovery efforts on behalf of the state. You have to evaluate the dangers of that in each case, but it is important to factor in the possibility that you may not be representing your client to the end of his or her legal challenges to the capital conviction and sentence. It is not unusual for counsel to change in habeas cases for various reasons. If that happens in your case, your successor will have no way of knowing what the expert did if some written record is not kept of it. There is no right answer that applies to every case; just be sure to weigh the relevant factors.

If you do have an expert write a report, there is nothing wrong with asking for a draft of the report and suggesting changes that make it more responsive to the relevant issues in your case. This doesn't mean you are telling the expert what to say; you are simply focusing the report on the important issues the findings were intended to address.

5. Investigation is never done.

Though you will reach a point where you have to take the information you have gathered and mold it into a writ application, you should not assume that all investigation is done then. There will likely be some things you could not finish before writing the application. Some matters may surface in the state's answer that require exploration. Some information just may not surface until you are beyond the filing of the initial application. In such situations, you have a responsibility to try to find ways of bringing the additional information to the courts' attention. If you run afoul of the deadlines in the new statute governing amendments or supplements, so be it. You must try to include the additional relevant facts you have found in the state litigation before the case goes to federal court, because if you don't try, those facts are lost to your client during the rest of the client's legal struggles. Make a record of how the facts came to your attention, why they could not be included earlier and how they are relevant to the issues in the case. If state courts are unsympathetic, you might find a more attentive audience in federal court when you argue about the unfairness and unreliability of the state post-conviction process.

VI. WRITING THE APPLICATION AND ASSOCIATED DOCUMENTS.

When you file a writ application, you may file other pleadings, such as motions for evidentiary hearing, for discovery, and for stay of execution, if an execution date has been scheduled. The formal requirements for these documents are discussed below.

A. The Application.

There are not many formal requisites that govern the appearance of an application for a writ of habeas corpus. Though 11.071 purports to describe the procedure in a death penalty case, it says nothing about the physical appearance of an application. The only formal procedural matters it mentions are that habeas applications are to be filed with the convicting court, and they must be returnable to the Court of Criminal Appeals. 11.071 § 4(a). To be safe, lawyers should assume that TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. art. 11.14, which applied to writ applications under the former procedure, still applies. It provides the following relevant requirements:

- (1) The petition must "state substantially" that the applicant is illegally restrained in his liberty, and by whom, naming both parties;
- (2) A copy of the order by virtue of which the applicant is restrained is to be attached to the application;
- (3) There must be a prayer in the application for a writ of habeas corpus; and
- (4) The applicant must verify the allegations of the application under an oath saying they are true, according to his belief.

From this one can see that the form of capital writ applications is not tightly governed. It may be helpful, however, to review basic elements of form that a number of applications have followed in the past or that applications should now follow in light of the few statutory requirements that exist. A copy of a writ application including a couple of sample claims is found at Appendix M.

RE: COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS #73,371, YOKAMON LANEAL HEARN; TRIAL
COURT #F98-46232-US, 282ND DISTRICT COURT, DALLAS COUNTY, TEXAS

Dear Mr. Hearn:

I have been appointed by Judge Karen Greene to represent you under Art. 11.071, Code of Criminal Procedure in the above case. As you may know, this is a separate proceeding from the direct appeal, which is being handled by Attorney Robert P. Abbott. I understand his brief on appeal is due February 11, 2000.

The 11.071 writ of habeas corpus proceeding concerns constitutional issues in the way your case was handled.

I will try to visit you during December. Hopefully I will be able to review part of your trial records before coming to see you. Please let me know how to contact your family. I do not want to make the trip to Ellis I to visit you at a time you may be having visits from family.

Yours truly,

Jan E. Hemphill
